MISCELLANEOUS READING. THE CHILD'S EVENING PRAYER.

"Who, that has lived through years of careless gayety, or sorrow, or crime, bas for-gotten that little prayer so often murmured at the mother's knee:-

"Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord my soul to keep; If I should die before I wake, I pray the Lord my soul to take."

The origin of this stanza it is difficult to nels; Jeans; Twills; Cotton Hosiery; Darning trace. It appeared in the "New England Primer" more than four score years ago, and was probably then as many years older, although some have ascribed it to Dr. Watts. Mr. Tower, in his "Pictorial Reader," medtions as a fact related of J. Q. Adams, that Bage, and Madonna Cloths, for Travelling during his long life, he never retired to bed without repeating the above prayer of his Valcenes Edgings; super undressed Irish Linens; childhood, which, learned from a mother's Linen and Cotton Sheetings, of the best makes: lips, he had been early taught to lisp. The prevailing sentiment, so sublimely simple, however childishly expressed, so affected some poet of later days, as to originate one of the most touching little poems in our language. The name of the author is not now remembered; but the beautiful production ought to be immortalized by general republication every year:-

> The dreamy night draws nigh; Soft airs delicious breathe of mingled flowers, And on the wings of slumber creep the hours; The moon is high:-See yonder tiny cot,

The lattice decked with vines-a tremulous ray Steals out to where the silver moonbeams lay, Yet pales them not! Within, two holy eyes,

Two little hands clasped softly, and a brow Where thought sits busy, weaving garlands now Of joys and sights For the swift coming years! Two rosy lips with innocent worship part:sent season, are now offering great inducements List! be thou saint-or skeptic, if thou art,-Thou must have ears :-Now I lay me down to sleep,

I pray the Lord my soul to keep; If I should die before I wake, I pray the lord my soul to take." Doth it not noiseless ope The very floodgates of thy heart, and make A better man of thee? for her sweet sake,

Who, with strong hope, Her sweet task ne'er forgot To whisper "Now I lay me," o'er and o'er, As thou didst kneel upon the sanded floor-Forget them not! From many a festive hall

Where flashing light and flushing glances vie, And, robed in splendor, mirth makes revelry-Soft voices call To sweep the harp strings, and to join the dance;

Amid the songs, The merry laugh, the jest, Come to her vision scenes of long ago, When by her snowy couch she murmured low, Before her rest, That simple infant's prayer: Once more at home, she lays her jewels by,

75 PIECES SUPER. BLEACHED COT. Throws back the curls that shade her heavy eye, And kneeling there With quivering lip and sigh, Takes from her fingers white the sparling rings, The golden coronet from her brow, and flings

Nor doth she thoughtless dare To seek her rest, 'till she hath asked of Heaven That all her sins, through Christ may be forgiven; Then comes the prayer-"Now I lay me down to sleep I pray the Lord my soul to keep; If I should die before I wake

I pray the Lord my soul to take." The warrior on the field, After the battle, pillowing his head Perhaps upon a fallen comrade dead, Scorns not to yield To the sweet memories of his childhood's hour, When fame was bartered for a crimson flower;-

The statesman gray, His massive brow all hung with laurel leaves, Forgets his honors while his memory weaves A picture of that home, 'mid woods and streams Where hoary mountains caught the sun's first A cabin rude—the wide fields glistening, The cattle yoked, and mutely listening. The farmer's toil, the farmer's fare, and bes Of earthly luxuries, the farmer's rest;

But hark! a soft voice steals upon his heart-

"Now say your prayer, my son, before we part:" And, clasping his great hands—a child once Upon his breast, forgetting life's long war-Thus hear him pray : "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord my soul to keep, If I should die before I wake,

I pray the Lord my soul to take." TABLISHMENT, 249, KING STREET.— $200 REWARD.—Broke out of the Alexandria County Jail, on Sunday night last, the 18th inst., JAMES TRAM-
